When I first heard about covid-19 I was just ending my sixth grade year. I didn't know how to feel. It was like a wave of confusion struck me... later I was told that I was going to virtually learn. I didn't even know what Virtually learning was, It just added more confusion to me. Eventually I got the hang of it but it was still hard for me as a student and even teachers. Virtually learning kept my grades below passing for a while.

In the beginning of seventh grade most students were hybrid learning. I was actually in school learning Thursdays, Fridays and some wednesdays. On Mondays and Tuesdays I spent the day at home learning on my chromebook. When I was at home learning my grades kept slipping under a 65, I kept thinking 7th grade was going to be the year I fail. Distractions were the only things that kept me awake at home and by the end of class I had no idea what to do. After a while I was in school everyday. Finally, I thought it was near the end of the marking period and I managed to get my grades passing ... well all except one.

Now people are making risky choices to either get the vaccine or not. I know it sounds like an easy answer but there could be long term effects and this vaccine has not been around for long. Everyone including me now has plans for a party or something like that but as always we will need masks. As my seventh grade year starts to fade away, so does my fear. I finally thought the pandemic was gone for good but it's always going to be around. I have to admit facing covid was scary for me and others but it did teach everyone a valuable lesson.
